The first recorded evidence of cricket being played in Hong Kong dates back to 1841. Today, cricket is a fully-fledged sport that is professionally administered by the Hong Kong Cricket Association. Competitions are organized throughout the year for all age groups – from primary school children to senior players.

Cricket has traditionally been a game dominated by expatriate players, but this is likely to change gradually – not because there will be fewer expatriate players, but because more people of Asian extraction will want to play, especially if games are shorter. This will be important if Hong Kong wishes to remain internationally competitive given the tightening of International eligibility rules.

There are two main competitions – a round-robin league followed by a knock-out cup competition. Junior cricket is played at Under 13, Under 15, Under 17 and Under 19 age levels and there are also various inter-school competitions played at primary school and secondary school levels.
